New Illustratus™ Product Line from Uhlig Permits Photo Uploads, Full-Color Customization

OVERLAND PARK, KS, May 12, 2004 – The nation’s leading developer of variable-information publishing systems announced today that it is launching a new, premium newsletter line designed to give users unprecedented flexibility and convenience in creating and editing full-color publications online.

Senior executives at Uhlig LLC said the new product line, to be marketed under the name Illustratus, provides a wide range of features that have never before been available in an online publishing product. These features include the ability to upload, crop and place digital photographs; search for and insert professionally written articles from a database covering hundreds of topics; edit and spell-check custom-written articles; and order translations in more than 20 foreign languages.

The Illustratus product line is also the first national newsletter service to provide full-color customization of all editorial and graphics in the publication.

“Illustratus is a tremendous breakthrough in both the editing of content and the quality of the printed publication,” said Mark A. Uhlig, chairman of Uhlig LLC. “The power of the software is evident in the enormous range of new features we are able to deliver to our customers in this product line.”

Uhlig LLC is a recognized national leader in the field of variable-content publishing. The company's products and software systems are designed to bring the power of advanced publishing technologies to a wide range of critical business needs. Each day, thousands of businesses across the United States and Canada rely on Uhlig's proprietary solutions to produce their complex legal, financial and marketing documents – all delivered with unprecedented standards of quality, efficiency and flexibility.
